How I've learned about feminist sisterhood

- From working with African feminists as partners in a civil society partnership to end child marriage, Girls Not Brides.
- From listening to African women speak about their feminist journeys on the Eyala platform.
- From hosting Eyala Sisters' Circles about sisterhood and other lived realities of African feminists.
- From resourcing and supporting African women's rights organisations at the African Women's Development Fund (AWDF)

What I've learned about feminist sisterhood

1. There is no feminism without sisterhood, yet feminist spaces often take sisterhood for granted.
2. Sometimes, feminists discriminate against some women's rights... in the name of sisterhood.
3. A gift we receive and the responsibility to share.
4. A space for growth, but the tolerance makes it hard to
5. A space to let our hair down, but also a space that keeps us accountable.

Sisterhood should be transformational, not transactional!
